How many times will we call crises “an opportunity to learn”? Climate change, conflict, and the pandemic have exacerbated both the needs of displaced people and the already widening gap in resources available to meet those. The conflict in Ukraine is compounding these effects but has also shown that the international community can respond with solidarity when it has the will. This event will stress the need to consistently - not selectively - apply lessons from the past to create a paradigm shift to addressing forced displacement. Speakers will call for system reforms to address the financing gap, the global hunger crisis, inequitable approaches to protection, and the consequences for individuals' rights and wellbeing.
