Background

Since 17 January, fighting between Tuareg rebels and Malian forces in northern Mali has been taking place in three main regions: Gao, Kidal and Tombouctou. The MNLA (Mouvement National de Libération de l'Azawad) is also battling the Malian Government for the independence of part of the north. The cities affected by the fighting are: Menaka, Anderboukane, Intillit, Issit, all at the border with Niger. The cities of Léré and Niafounke found at the border with Mauritania and Aguelhok and Tessalit near Algeria have also been affected. The rebels have been attacking governmental forces using small groups has caused panic among civilian populations and forced many to flee into the neighbouring countries of Niger, Burkina Faso, Mauritania, Togo and Guinea. There are indications that Malians have also fled to Algeria. As the fighting continues in northern Mali and as the attacks keep shifting from area to area, further displacement inside the country and to the neighbouring countries is likely to continue. Some 80,000 persons are reported to be displaced inside Mali.

Profile of displaced persons

Refugees are predominantly Tuareg and the majority are pastoralists. Refugees have fled on foot, by car and some, in particular from urban areas, by plane. They have fled attacks on their villages where their homes, shops and personal belongings have been destroyed and cattle killed.

Protection Needs/Response

Rapid Protection Assessments: UNHCR has conducted rapid protection assessments (interviews with a series of refugee focus groups) centred around the following themes: composition of the refugee population, reasons for flight, access and safety in country of asylum, civilian character of asylum, humanitarian assistance and priority needs, as well as specific protection concerns. In Niger, UNHCR has jointly conducted rapid protection assessments with the Government in Miel (29 February 2012), Chinegodar (27 February 2012), Mangaize (24 February 2012) and in Ayorou (2 March 2012). In Burkina Faso, a rapid protection assessment was conducted in the Sahel Province.

There has been no evidence of refoulement and refugees have been able to access the borders of neighbouring countries to seek asylum. There is no evidence of presence of armed elements in the refugee locations so far.

The refugee sites are being provided with protection from the government gendarmerie and military and safer areas are being identified for relocation. As many of them have lost livelihoods and possessions, including cattle, they are currently living on assistance provided by the host Governments, UN agencies and NGOs.

In Niger, while family separation as a result of the flight was not highlighted by the refugees as an issue, a few female-headed families were identified. Other cases of vulnerability included people with disabilities and psychological issues. Lack of livelihoods was mentioned as affecting men's morale.

In Mauritania, UNHCR conducted interviews of women heads of family in the Mbéra refugee camp. Some are widows and others have their husbands back in Mali guarding property and livestock or fighting. They have dependent children and few means of subsistence. Most of the children have never attended school and some worked as shepherds in Mali. The women declared that they felt secure in Mauritania. No cases of SGBV have been reported.

In Burkina Faso, the main protection concerns expressed by the refugees are of life-saving nature.

In Mali, UNHCR with OCHA, UNICEF, and IOM have discussed the IDP situation in northern Mali and it was agreed to set up a Humanitarian Country Team and to undertake inter-agency missions in the areas hosting IDPs, primarily where access is possible, namely in areas such as Niono (Ségou), Niafounke (Timbuctou) and Gao

Registration/Relocation: UNHCR has initiated household level registration in coordination with the Governments along with establishing a screening mechanism to identify vulnerable people in the refugee hosting countries. Government officials and partners are being trained for this purpose. In Niger, registration of refugees in all sites has been completed, except in Abala and Tchindadaren. In Burkina Faso, registration in Oudalan will be completed by 8 March. Relocation of refugees to Ferrerrio and Mentao sites will start on 10 March and be completed in 4 days. Registration in Mauritania is ongoing. The main difficulty UNHCR faces is accessing remote areas, including with security escorts, to properly undertake the exercise. While registering, vaccinations are being given to vulnerables, children and pregnant women and malnourishment testing is being undertaken.

Life-saving assistance

In all hosting countries, UNHCR is increasing its logistics capacity to meet the transport needs of refugees for relocation as well as for transport and delivery of NFIs. Emergency shelter is being provided at major entry points, and tents and plastic sheeting for those in designated camps. Basic infrastructure is also being established on identified sites further away from the borders. Pending more permanent solutions potable water is being trucked to some sites. Communal and family latrines are being built. Partners are being identified to provide access to basic emergency health and nutrition services at reception and transit centres. Existing community clinics in areas of arrival are being identified and will be stocked with basic drugs and vaccines, 'reproductive health and dignity kits', and medical kits. Wet feeding will be available at reception and transit centers and regular food rations in designated camps.

In Niger, some sites have Malian refugees and Nigerien returning nationals who are being identified through the registration exercises. Shelter: Refugees and returning Nigeriens have been subsisting in difficult conditions at the border areas: in the open, in makeshift shelters, while few are with host families. Despite response from some aid agencies and from the Government, shelter, water/sanitation and health particularly for the most vulnerable are a predominant concern. Health issues include diarrhoea, respiratory problems, eye infection, and malaria and outbreaks of cholera and the lack of essential medicines. As many of those fleeing have lost livelihoods and possessions, including cattle, they are currently living on assistance provided by the host governments, UN agencies and NGOs. Refugees voiced concerns about arduous living conditions for the elderly, women and children.

Assistance to-date in Niger has centred on food and water and basic relief items. UNHCR supplied NFIs to Ayorou on 22 and 26 February. Plan Niger supplied the food items between 13 and 15 February. Oxfam GB has supplied some water. In terms of needs, the refugees stressed water, more non-food items and shelter materials. Water is a serious issue as the river water is muddy and there is concern about a potential cholera outbreak if the current situation is not addressed. MSF (CH) has put in place a fully functional water system in Ouallam and latrines. Education: Access to the local Nigerien schools has been possible although the schools do not have enough capacity to absorb all Malian students and curriculums are different. Nutrition: Initial rapid health assessments are being conducted with UNICEF, UNFPA, MOH, WFP, WHO, OCHA, MSF(CH) and UNAIDS as of 6 March on refugee sites. MSF conducted a mass vaccination campaign in Sinogodar and a rapid nutrition screening. Refugees will be included by UNICEF in its ongoing nutrition programmes including blanket distribution. Formal nutrition survey will be organized after refugees relocate to identified sites away from the borders. Shelter: 60 tents have been installed in Ouallam site with the support of Islamic Relief.

In Burkina Faso, refugees face water shortages. OXFAM will install water bladders in Oudalan. Food is a problem, as there has been sporadic food distribution by WFP and once by MSF. WFP has now procured 250 tons of food items (for 18,000 refugees and 6,000 hosting population) and plans the distribution in Ferrerio and Mentao sites from 12 March. There are no provisions for sanitation yet on the Ferrerio (in Oudalan) and Mentao (in Soum) sites. Health: Refugee children show signs of respiratory problems, dysentery has been reported. Chronically-ill refugees have no medicines. UNHCR has asked MSF to open a permanent presence in Oudalan. The local authorities, who have their own drought problem, are not able to provide material assistance other than access to school (in Ferrerio) and health care (presence of health workers on site, but no medicines). There are two medical NGOs in Soum district training local clinics, none so far in Oudalan. Education: Many refugee children have not been attending school for two to four weeks, especially in Mentao. Refugee children in Ferrerio have joined the local school and UNHCR is planning to build additional classes. There are teachers among the refugees. Distribution of 2000 essential kits for heads of families is planned during the 12 March week.

In Mauritania, UNHCR continues to distribute NFIs, supply water and food rations for more than 20,000 refugees. The local health services continue to conduct the medical and nutritional screening of the refugee population, with the support of UNICEF. UNHCR installed three water tanks in the refugee camp in Mbera and another tank in the refugee site in Fassala. These tanks were provided by UNICEF.
