Challenges Faced

- Cases of clients falsifying information to fit a particular profile which they have heard has resulted in the resettlement of a refugee.

- The prolonged rigors of resettlement lead to very frustrated clients who believe that since RCK is the organization that carried out their security interview, RCK has the final word as to whether a client is resettled or not.

- How to manage client expectations as most clients have the impression that once they have been interviewed for security concerns that they are automatically eligible for resettlement.
Best Practices

- Taking due diligence in obtaining information about the country of origin so as to verify client information.

- Ensuring that the procedure of resettlement is explained to the clients from the onset so as to assist in managing the expectations of the clients.

- Standardized criteria for flagging of cases that are in dire need of durable solutions.

- Ensure constant communication between partners for purposes of tracking the various stages at which a particular case is at.
Recommendations and Suggestions

- UNHCR to open up dialogue with member states of the UN to advocate for more countries to take up resettlement of refugees.
- Fast tracking the resettlement process so as to reduce the time taken to process the resettlement.
- Identifying partners should be vigilante so to identify cases of fraud.
- Sensitize clients on the repercussions of providing false information.
- Incorporate more partner agencies in identification and referrals.
- UNHCR to continue offering continuous trainings on resettlement to staff of partner agencies for purposes of keeping up with the emerging and changing trends in resettlements.
