

Overall situation in the country

The humanitarian and security crisis in Mali continues to displace Malians into Mauritania, particularly into the south-eastern border region of Hodh Chargui, where Mbera refugee camp is located. This influx is exacerbating the strain on services and natural resources in a region with high levels of multi-dimensional poverty (approx. 78%) and acutely vulnerable to climate-related shocks. As the camp is saturated, the majority of new arrivals are choosing to settle in neighboring villages, requiring UNHCR to adapt its response both to needs within the camp (see below) and out of the camp (see page 2).

240,693

total refugees and asylum seekers

140,044

registered refugees and asylum seekers

33,516

registered women

75,327

registered children

Total refugees and asylum seekers by region

Situation in Mbera Camp

108,148

registered refugees

83%

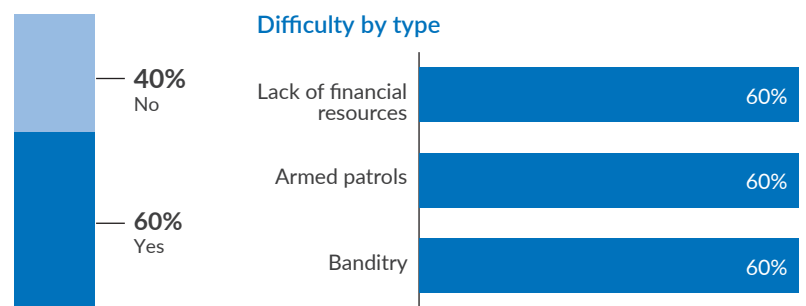

registered women and children

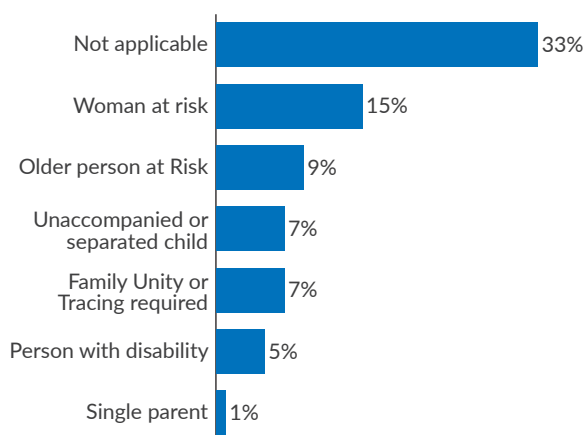

383

new arrivals in June

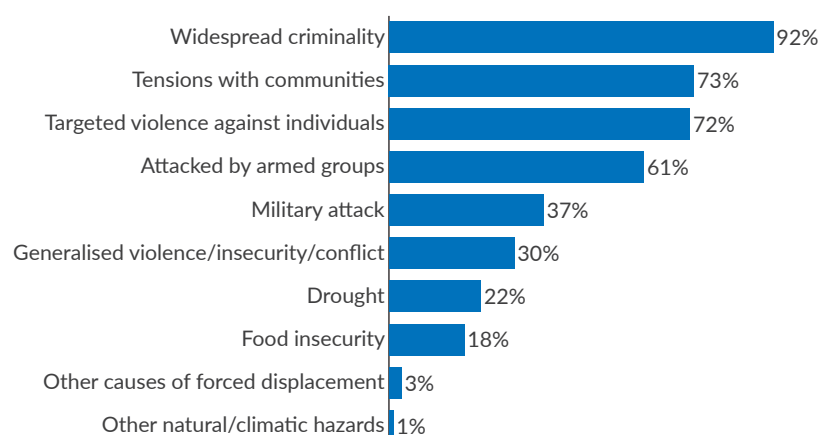

Difficulty along the journey to reach Mauritania

Specific needs declared by new arrivals

Reasons for fleeing Mali

Out-of-camp situation in Hodh Chargui region

The out-of-camp response is part of the emergency humanitarian response for Malian refugees crossing into Hodh Chargui region. Focusing on refugees opting to settle outside Mbera refugee camp, which is already saturated, the objective is to deliver vital assistance to vulnerable displaced populations and host communities through an area-based approach. With refugees scattered across a wide geographical area, UNHCR is collecting monthly data on new arrivals through its Population Flow Monitoring in over 60 villages and, with its partners and the local authorities, aims to scale up the provision of basic assistance such as food, shelter, healthcare, and WASH services.

120,219
total Malian refugees

11,723
registered Malian refugees

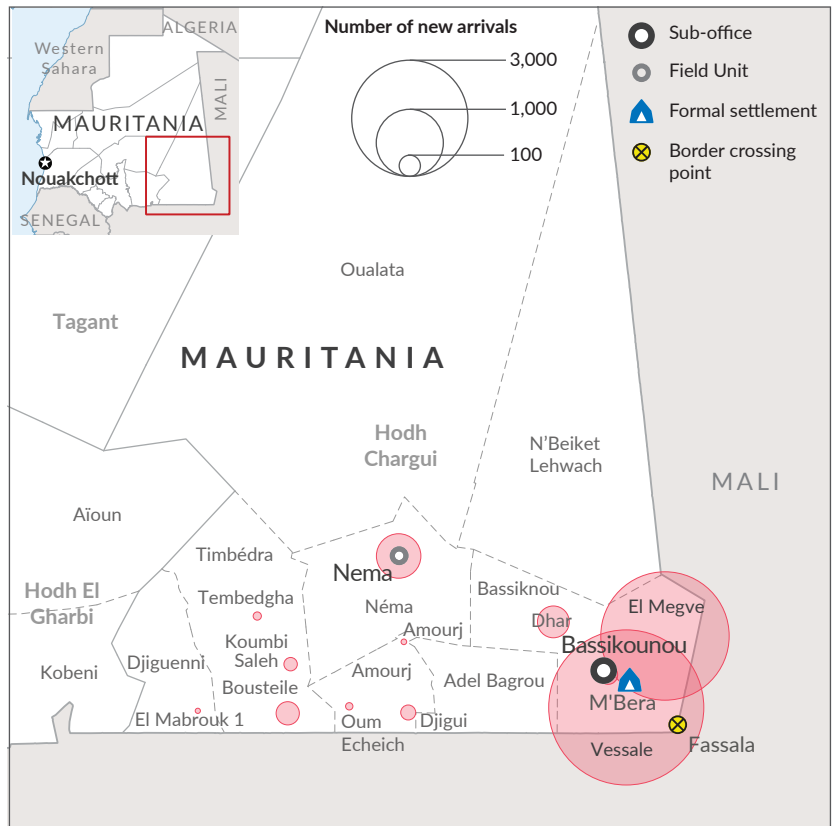

10,009
new arrivals in June

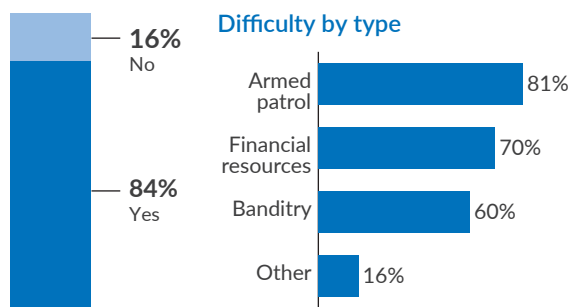

93%
women and children among new arrivals

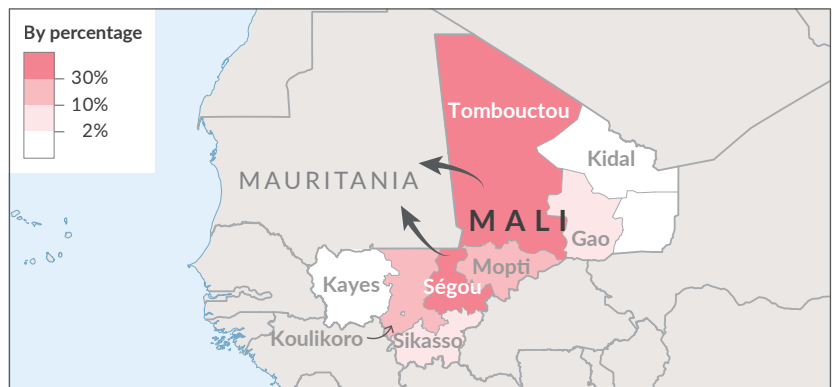

New arrivals in May by host commune

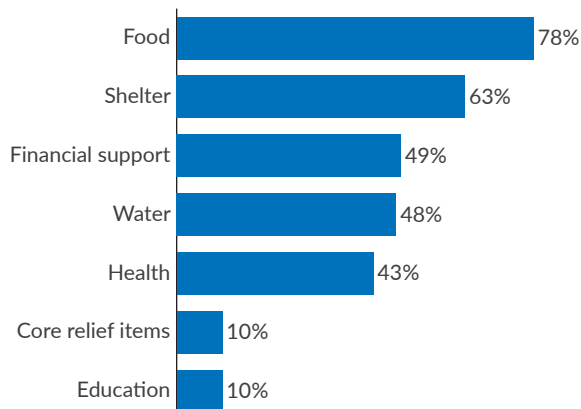

Difficulty along the journey to reach Mauritania

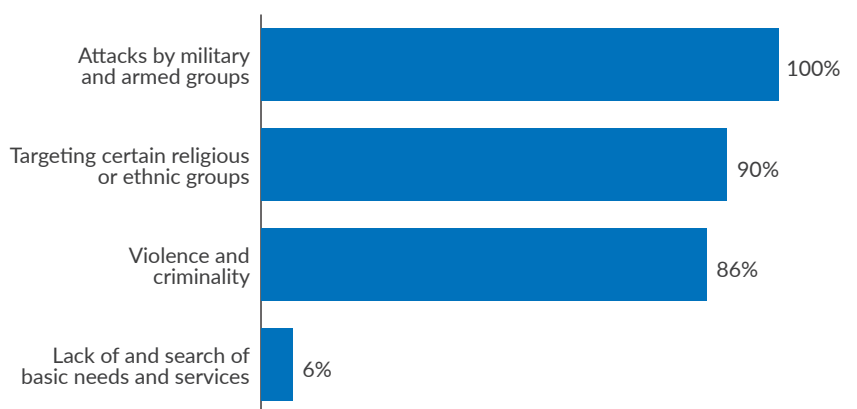

Region of origin (as identified by key informants)

Main needs in host villages

Reasons for fleeing Mali

The boundaries and names shown and the designations used on this map do not imply official endorsement or acceptance by the United Nations.