

Overall situation in the country

The humanitarian and security crisis in Mali continues to displace Malians into Mauritania, particularly into the south-eastern border region of Hodh Chargui, where Mbera refugee camp is located. This influx is exacerbating the strain on services and natural resources in a region with high levels of multi-dimensional poverty (approx. 78%) and acutely vulnerable to climate-related shocks. As the camp is saturated, the majority of new arrivals are choosing to settle in neighboring villages, requiring UNHCR to adapt its response both to needs within the camp (see below) and out of the camp (see page 2).

280,222

total refugees and asylum seekers

156,301

registered refugees and asylum seekers

36,867

registered women
(=>18)

85,705

registered boys and girls

Situation in Mbera Camp

115,150

registered refugees in November

83%

registered women and children

953

new arrivals in November

Specific needs declared by new arrivals

Total refugees and asylum seekers by region

Estimated new refugee arrivals in Hodh Chargui in 2024

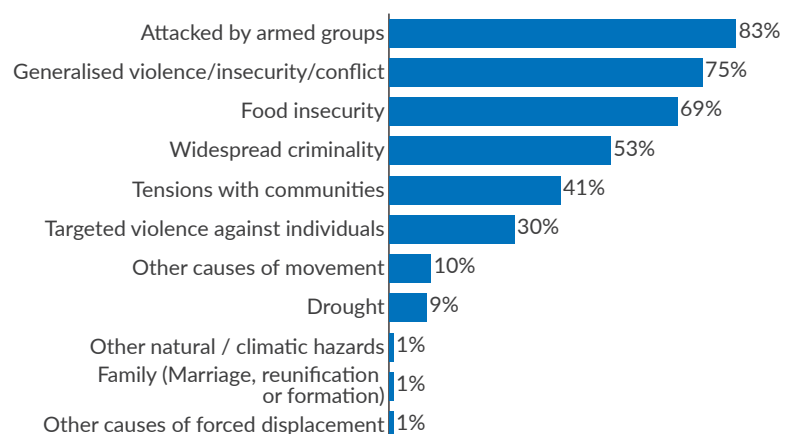

Difficulty along the journey to reach Mauritania

Difficulty by type

Reasons for fleeing Mali

Out-of-camp situation in Hodh Chargui region

The out-of-camp response is part of the emergency humanitarian response for Malian refugees crossing into Hodh Chargui region. Focusing on refugees opting to settle outside Mbera refugee camp, which is already saturated, the objective is to deliver vital assistance to vulnerable displaced populations and host communities through an area-based approach. With refugees scattered across a wide geographical area, UNHCR is collecting data on new arrivals through its Population Flow Monitoring in 69 villages and, with its partners and the local authorities, aims to scale up the provision of basic assistance such as food, shelter, healthcare, and WASH services.

147,598
total Malian refugees
mid-November

23,677
registered Malian refugees

5,704
new arrivals
mid-November

79%
women and children
among new arrivals

New arrivals in October and mid-November by host commune

Difficulty along the journey to reach Mauritania

Region of origin (as identified by key informants)

Main needs in host villages

Reasons for fleeing Mali

The boundaries and names shown and the designations used on this map do not imply official endorsement or acceptance by the United Nations.