SOUTH AFRICA

Working environment

• The context

South Africa received more than 207,000 individual asylum applications in 2008 and a further 222,300 in 2009, representing nearly a four-fold rise in both years over the levels seen in 2007. These dramatic increases have resulted from the flow of Zimbabweans into South Africa and mixed movements from the East and Horn of Africa and Great Lakes regions that include many asylum-seekers, but also other individuals seeking to regularize their stay in South Africa for reasons not related to protection.

South Africa's Department of Home Affairs has now established seven Refugee Reception Offices in the major cities around the country to increase its asylum processing capacity. But the backlog of pending applications has increased nonetheless, due to the sheer numbers. In April 2009, the Minister for Home Affairs suspended deportations to Zimbabwe and announced a special dispensation for Zimbabweans to regularize their stay, while keeping the asylum door open for those seeking international protection. While this scheme was not implemented, a new one has been announced in September 2010.

Other refugees and asylum-seekers in South Africa originate from the Great Lakes region (particularly Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda), and the Horn of Africa (Eritrea, Ethiopia and Somalia). All refugees and asylum-seekers in South Africa enjoy free movement within the country, and most settle in large cities already crowded by unprecedented migration from rural areas. Although they have the right to seek employment and avail themselves of basic social services, high level of unemployment and limitations on services remain major constraints.

Competition over jobs, business opportunities, public services and housing give rise to tension among refugees, asylum-seekers, migrants and host communities. Xenophobic violence continues to occur, though fears of widespread clashes in the wake of the 2010 World Cup proved unfounded.

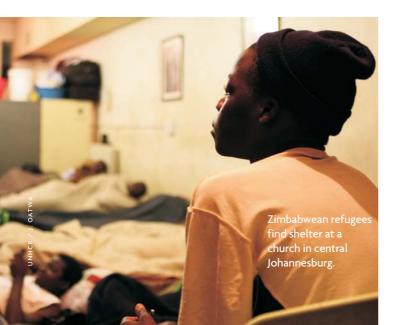

• The needs

UNHCR undertook protection needs assessments in Cape Town, Durban, Johannesburg, Port Elizabeth and Pretoria in mid-2009, in order to define the challenges facing urban refugees and asylum-seekers. These assessments then informed a comprehensive protection and solutions strategy for 2010 and 2011, which includes an expansion of time-limited and direct assistance to meet shelter, food, health and educational needs, as well as self-reliance initiatives.

The Department of Home Affairs is expected to review South Africa's migration policies and undertake reform of the national asylum system in order to tackle the challenge of mixed migration. UNHCR will provide technical advice on how to reduce the backlog of pending status applications and appeals, and to improve registration, reception, data collection, case management and refugee status determination (RSD) procedures.

Voluntary repatriation is available as an option for refugees from Angola and the Great Lakes countries, although interest in return remains low. Resettlement from South Africa is required for the most vulnerable refugees with serious protection needs, and who are unable to integrate locally, including because of xenophobia.

South African law allows for the granting of permanent residence and, eventually, citizenship to refugees who have lived in the country for more than five years. To achieve this durable solution, refugees need assistance in navigating the administrative procedures and support to achieve self-reliance.

Main objectives and targets

Fair protection processes

- The level of individual documentation is increased.
 - All adult people of concern are provided with individual protection documentation.

Security from violence and exploitation

- Arbitrary detention is reduced or eliminated.
 - UNHCR has access to the persons of concern in detention at all times.

Basic needs and services

- New arrivals and most vulnerable individuals are provided with emergency shelter and food assistance.
 - About 15,000 individuals will be provided with emergency shelter and food assistance, pending measures to become self- supporting.
- Sufficient access to basic domestic and hygiene items is ensured.
 - All members of the target population of concern receive sanitary materials every month.

Durable solutions

- The potential for resettlement is realized.
 - About 1,500 individuals with specific needs are submitted for resettlement.

Strategy and activities in 2011

UNHCR's planning for 2011 is based on a projected 470,000 people of concern, including some 53,000 recognized refugees. Within this population, some 15,000 people will receive direct assistance while others will benefit from indirect support.

UNHCR will assist the Department of Home Affairs with technical advice on planned immigration and asylum policy reviews. It will also help the authorities to continue building the capacity of the Refugee Reception Offices and train their personnel. UNHCR will encourage the implementation of fast and fair asylum processes and the setting up of alternative mechanisms to deal with persons not in need of international protection.

Temporary shelter and food assistance will be provided for vulnerable refugees and asylum-seekers. UNHCR's implementing partners will deliver shelter assistance on the basis of individual assessments geared to meet immediate needs. UNHCR will also support interventions with a longer-term impact on refugee self-reliance, such as vocational training, job placement and microcredit facilities.

UNHCR will pursue all three durable solutions for refugees, supporting voluntary repatriation, seeking to expand local integration by assisting refugees applying for permanent residence, and using resettlement for individuals for whom no other options are available.

The Office will also continue working with the Government and other partners to build tolerance toward refugees and asylum-seekers through public information campaigns against xenophobia and interventions at the community level designed to facilitate dialogue.

Constraints

Refugees and asylum-seekers have settled in many major cities across South Africa, making effective outreach a challenge. UNHCR has already broadened its presence by consolidating the Cape Town and Musina offices in 2010, making new partnership arrangements, and planning the establishment of a Durban office in 2011.

UNHCR cannot address the needs of refugees and asylum-seekers living in difficult urban environments without taking account of the needs of less affluent local communities having similar needs. To avoid exacerbating tensions between communities, it is essential for UNHCR to broaden the platform for humanitarian action, engaging other partners in a coordinated response.

While awareness campaigns can help to shape and influence public attitudes, they cannot address the causes underlying the problem of xenophobia in South Africa.

Organization and implementation

Coordination

In South Africa, UNHCR works closely with the Department of Home Affairs and the Department of Social Development, as well as the South African Police Service, the South African Human Rights Commission and other national ministries and agencies and provincial and municipal governments. UNHCR collaborates with other UN agencies within the UN Country Team and leads the Protection Working Group (PWG), which was established based upon lessons learned from the inter-agency response to the May 2008 xenophobic violence. The PWG's membership has expanded progressively to include both Government agencies and civil society.

UNHCR's regional office in Pretoria provides strategic coordination, management oversight and technical support for the country operations in Angola, Botswana, Malawi, Mozambique, Namibia, Zambia and Zimbabwe. The Pretoria office is directly responsible for UNHCR's programmes and activities for persons of concern in South Africa and in Comoros, Lesotho, Madagascar, Mauritius, Seychelles, and Swaziland.

Financial information

The budget for UNHCR's operation in South Africa increased gradually in 2006 and 2007, reflecting the steady increase of the population of concern. In 2008, the budget more than doubled to USD 12.3 million, mainly in response to the xenophobic violence that broke out in some major cities of South Africa. Part of the budget was also used to address the urgent needs of the large number of asylum-seekers from Zimbabwe, who arrived following the violence that erupted after the disputed March 2008 elections. In 2009, the budget decreased in line with the improved situation in Zimbabwe and with the conclusion of activities for persons displaced by xenophobic violence the previous year.

The South Africa budget increased significantly in 2010, following the introduction of the comprehensive needs assessment, which resulted in plans to dramatically expand UNHCR's direct assistance programmes for urban refugees and asylum-seekers.

Consequences of a 20 – 40 per cent funding shortfall

- Some 7,000 people will not receive emergency shelter and food assistance.
- Some 40 per cent of adolescent girls and women of childbearing age will not receive sanitary materials each month.
- Only about 800 resettlement cases will be submitted.
- Some 35 per cent of persons of concern will not receive individual protection documentation.
