South Sudanese refugees find shelter and protection in Uganda.
As conflicts proliferate worldwide, so do the numbers of people in need of international protection. Most significantly, civilians are increasingly affected by armed conflict and bear the terrible consequences of its impact.

Against this challenging context, UNHCR is working to reinvigorate and reaffirm the centrality of protection in all aspects of the humanitarian response. In 2015, the Office will continue to ensure that protection responses are integrated from the outset of emergencies, and that protection strategies address critical risks and inform an overall humanitarian response.
UNHCR will also continue to work with States to build and strengthen national systems to deliver protection. New strategies and guidance tools include a Global Initiative on Protection at Sea; the Beyond Detention Strategy; and the Campaign to End Statelessness being launched in late 2014 (see chapter Ending Statelessness).

Work will continue on finding ways to empower displaced communities by employing a community-based approach, and ensuring full integration of the Age, Gender and Diversity (AGD) approach into operations.

Examples of planned activities in 2015 are presented in matrix format, complemented by several short texts on topical subjects. They illustrate how UNHCR continues to innovate and adapt the many different ways in which it seeks to ensure respect by governments of the core principles of international refugee law across the globe, whether on land or at sea, to protect and assist all who are in need of international protection.

Clarifying the centrality of the 1951 Convention

Today’s conflicts are often driven by racial, ethnic, religious and/or political divisions. In the Central African Republic, South Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic (Syria), and more recently in Iraq, what may appear at first glance to be indiscriminate violence often targets particular populations on the basis of their perceived support for one of the parties to the conflict.

The right to seek and enjoy asylum enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and reflected in the 1951 Refugee Convention provides the legal basis for protecting people fleeing persecution, conflict and violence related to their race, religion, nationality, social group or political opinion.

In 2015, UNHCR will issue Guidelines on International Protection to help clarify why the Convention applies to people fleeing conflict and violence in such situations. A striking example is that of the many Syrians at risk of persecution by reason of alleged political opinion, or because they are perceived to belong to a religious group associated with one of the parties to the conflict. At present, many States parties to the Convention give such individuals a form of subsidiary protection, instead of the refugee status to which the Convention entitles them. The Guidelines will thus help Governments to understand in which circumstances they need to provide people fleeing violence with refugee status under the 1951 Convention.

The scale of displacement in 2014 also means that, for some host countries, individual refugee status determination (RSD) becomes impossible. Following the issuance of guidelines on temporary protection or stay arrangements, which are one possible response in such situations, UNHCR will issue additional guidelines on international protection in 2015 for governments that may need to resort to group determination for refugee status – or determination on a prima facie basis. Existing operational guidelines on maintaining the civilian and humanitarian character of asylum and refugee camps will also be updated, specifying clear, practical steps to assist governments to identify, separate and deal appropriately with armed actors.

Protection at sea

Whether in the Mediterranean, the Gulf of Aden, the Caribbean or South-East Asia, loss of life at sea continues to grow. More and more desperate people are taking to the seas, often in unseaworthy boats, not only risking their lives but increasingly falling victim to exploitation, trafficking and violence during their attempts to reach safety. Among them, many are fleeing persecution, conflict and war, as they travel alongside people moving for other reasons.

This global phenomenon reveals serious gaps in search, rescue and disembarkation capacities. In some instances thorough search-and-rescue measures are taken. In others, however, “deterrence” objectives take precedence over rescue and protection or limited capabilities hinder effective action.

Recent positive efforts to save lives at sea and to disembark people to a place of safety are welcome and deserve support. It is important that disembarkation arrangements are predictable, and allow asylum-seekers and refugees to find access to asylum and protection. To achieve this, regional cooperation among all affected States is vital.

Preventing loss of life at sea is the responsibility of all governments, including non-coastal States. This includes giving priority to search and rescue, facilitating disembarkation and care of rescued people, providing protection and long-term solutions for asylum-seekers and refugees travelling by sea, and offering alternatives to dangerous sea journeys.

In an effort to bring together all stakeholder perspectives, UNHCR’s Global Initiative on Protection at Sea aims to support action by States and regional entities that prevents loss of life at sea while ensuring that asylum-seekers and refugees travelling by sea can find protection. It will be the subject of the High Commissioner’s Dialogue on Protection Challenges in December 2014 and is also the focus of a new Central Mediterranean Sea Initiative in which UNHCR is proposing 12 concrete steps aimed at saving lives in collaboration with concerned States.
AREAS OF INTERVENTION
ANTICIPATED IN 2015

Security from violence and exploitation

Risk of SGBV reduced and quality of response improved
- SGBV protection officers will be deployed at the onset of emergencies to set up SGBV prevention and response programmes.

Assure SGBV programming in emergencies
- 40 country operations will be supported to develop and implement country-specific SGBV strategies in 2014-2015.
- UNHCR will contribute to the roll-out of the revised IASC Guidelines for GBV interventions in Humanitarian Settings.

Provide guidance and operational support for roll-out of updated strategies
- The implementation of the inter-agency gender-based violence information system (GBVIMS) will be supported in 15 operations in 2015.

Increase efficient data management
- A quick-reference note on SGBV prevention in schools will be finalized and disseminated.
- Programming for SGBV prevention and response in schools will be improved in 8 country operations in 2015.

Reinforce SGBV prevention in schools
- Capacity development, advocacy and support work will continue with traditional justice mechanisms with the aim of achieving the application of international standards for women’s and children’s rights in 3 country operations by 2015.

Strengthen partnerships for access to justice
- The English version of the facilitator’s guide on SGBV prevention and response will be launched at the end of 2014. It will be translated into French and Arabic, and disseminated to field operations in 2015.

Develop SGBV prevention and response capacity
- The English version of the mandatory SGBV E-learning will be launched in the first half of 2015. The Arabic, French and Spanish version will be launched in the second half of 2015, with an expected 40 per cent staff enrolment and completion.

Protection of children strengthened

Provide guidance and operational support to countries
- Targeted support for the implementation of the Child Protection Framework will be pursued in 11 existing priority countries.

Implement the child-protection regional initiative covering the Horn of Africa and Egypt
- The implementation of the Live, Learn and Play Safe regional initiative for unaccompanied and separated children and other children at risk in northern Ethiopia, Sudan, Egypt and Yemen, will continue in 2015.

Strengthen programming for adolescents and youth
- 16 youth-initiated and led protection projects will be supported and funded through the Youth Initiative Fund.
- A new programme for youth workers from refugee communities will be piloted.

Strengthen child protection response in emergencies
- 1 roving child-protection-in-emergencies expert will be hired (to complement a similar position seconded to UNHCR by Save the Children).
- 6 child protection officers will be deployed to emergencies.
- Targeted support will be provided to 4 emergency situations in the form of child protection deployments, development of operational tools, regional or country-specific strategies such as that developed for South Sudan.

Work towards ending the detention of asylum-seeking and stateless children
- As part of the Beyond Detention strategy, technical advice will be provided to governments and other stakeholders, in particular on child-appropriate alternatives to detention.
- Tools to support governments will be developed.

Strengthen capacity for the protection of children
- A self-learning training programme on child protection will be launched.
- Operational tools and briefs will be disseminated.
- Training events at global, regional and country level will be held.

Promote the protection of displaced children in inter-agency fora
- Protection of displaced children will be reflected in inter-agency tools and policies.
- UNHCR will contribute to the finalization of the Inter-Agency Handbook on Unaccompanied and Separated Children in 2015.

UNHCR Global Appeal 2015 Update
The experience of displacement can have a detrimental effect on young people at a critical period of transition from childhood to adulthood. Not only do young people in displacement face similar protection risks to those of adults, they are also frequently required to take on new roles and responsibilities that may increase these dangers. For example, girls and young women are at heightened risk of harmful coping strategies, such as survival sex and early marriage, while boys and young men increasingly face forced military recruitment or exploitation in the labour market.

Yet young people are often misunderstood or expected to behave like adults while being treated as children. All this points to the importance of paying greater attention to the protection needs of forcibly displaced youth, and developing a protection response that is participatory and builds on their capabilities and aspirations.

Getting protection programming right for forcibly displaced youth can pay dividends not only for them, but also their families and communities. Such are the objectives of UNHCR’s Youth Initiative Fund, launched in 2013. It asks displaced communities to design and lead projects to... address protection challenges they have identified within their own communities. In response to the growing interest among refugee youth, the Youth Initiative Fund aims to initiate two rounds of proposals and funding in 2015.

The Initiative takes a community-based approach to selecting and training coaches, and cultivating leadership among participating youth and adolescents, by enabling them to take on increased roles and responsibilities. It places the unique needs of youth and their communities at the centre of its design: participation is encouraged, but not mandatory, to take account of possible financial constraints and the demands of work. The programme serves to strengthen social cohesion, communication and understanding within and between groups, at no cost to the participants or to the community.

Examples of projects funded thus far include: an SGBV-prevention effort using Forum Theatre (an interactive methodology to encourage participants to challenge a given issue) for displaced young people in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia; a project to empower young refugees to become peer educators – with a focus on the empowerment of young women and girls – in the Islamic Republic of Iran; and a playground project in Morocco that brings together host communities and youth associations from different backgrounds to play basketball. The Moroccan project’s activities are not limited to sports; trained coaches engage young refugees and the local community through a series of free activities designed to enhance life skills and local integration.

In 2015, UNHCR aims to introduce a programme that will train young people from refugee communities to become youth workers within their communities. The idea is to provide an enabling environment in which young people can empower themselves through participation in projects aimed at strengthening their own protection.

Also planned for the coming year is close collaboration with the newly-appointed Secretary-General’s Envoy for Youth and Sport. This cooperation will involve integrated sports programming for displaced youth, with a focus on the prevention of violence, including SGBV, and exploitation, and the identification of young people at risk, through life-skills training.
NEWS AND VIEWS

Strengthen gender equality in displaced communities

Improve the extent to which women are able to actively participate in the decisions that affect their lives and the lives of their family and communities.

Ensure that there is a conductive environment for women and girls to achieve their potential as family and community advocates for change and a peaceful future rather than being perceived as vulnerable and reliant on international assistance.

Operational support will be provided to strengthen the implementation of the AGD Policy. This will ensure that the findings of participatory assessments and other forms of consultations with displaced communities are better reflected in planning, programming, implementation and monitoring.

At least 5 operations will be provided with direct protection support to work with communities to create an enabling environment so that women and girls can fully utilize their capacities, including in the areas of education and livelihoods.

Improve access to education

Provide technical support to operations

Increase enrolment rates for out-of-school children

Strengthen data management and monitoring of learning outcomes

Promote the use of technology in education

Enhance access to tertiary education

Services for people with specific needs strengthened

UNHCR and partner staff strengthen their capacity to address specific protection needs of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people of concern

UNHCR and partner staff strengthen their capacity to address specific protection needs of people with disabilities

Community mobilization strengthened and expanded

Operations will strengthen their delivery of community-based protection interventions.

Examples

- At least 5 operations will be provided with direct protection support to work with communities to create an enabling environment so that women and girls can fully utilize their capacities, including in the areas of education and livelihoods.
- Operational support will be provided to strengthen the implementation of the AGD Policy. This will ensure that the findings of participatory assessments and other forms of consultations with displaced communities are better reflected in planning, programming, implementation and monitoring.
- Efforts to ensure access to safe and quality education for out-of-school children, particularly for girls, will be expanded. Through the Educate A Child (EAC) programme, 140,000 out-of-school children will be enrolled in primary school in 12 countries.
- Monitoring of education programmes and education information management will be improved with a focus on learning outcomes.
- Use of innovative pedagogies and information communication technologies (ICTs) will be expanded to 5 additional operations to increase educational opportunities and enhance their quality.
- Scholarships will be provided for over 3,000 refugees through the DAFI tertiary scholarship and other scholarship programmes.
- Opportunities to access higher education will also be increased by engaging Ministries of Education and distance learning providers.
- At least two regional LGBTI workshops will be held with at least 100 participants, including UNHCR and partners.
- One comprehensive training package on protection of LGBTI people of concern will be made available online to UNHCR and broader humanitarian community.
- UNHCR will continue a global mapping of progress and gaps by region of efforts to enhance protection of LGBTI people of concern.
- At least four operations will continue to receive targeted technical support on disability inclusion, including training on policy and support in the development and implementation of action plans.
- A community-based protection expert will provide targeted technical support to at least 6 operations.
- A catalogue of good practices in community-based protection will be issued.
Survivors reported disturbing incidents of mass drownings, suffocations and a suspected multiple stabbing, UNHCR said in a statement issued in Geneva. The grim tally brings to some 800 the number of deaths at sea so far this year, compared to a total of 600 deaths in all of 2013, and 500 in 2012.

“The death of 260 people in less than ten days, in the most horrifying of circumstances, is evidence that the Mediterranean crisis is intensifying,” said António Guterres, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees. “Europeans need to take urgent action to stop this catastrophe getting worse in the second half of 2014.”

The tragedies mark an intensifying crisis on Europe’s shores, as many fleeing Eritrea, Syria and other countries torn by violence seek safety in Europe by risking their lives at sea in the hands of smugglers.

More than 75,000 refugees and migrants arrived by boat in Italy, Greece, Spain and Malta in the first half of 2014 – 25 per cent more than the 60,000 who made the same journey in the whole of 2013, and over three times the 22,500 who arrived in 2012. During the weekend of 19-20 July alone, Italian and Maltese authorities, together with several commercial vessels, rescued 8,000 people.

Guterres praised both Italy and Malta for their efforts, but said European States needed to step up their assistance. He called on governments to strengthen rescue operations, provide swift access to asylum procedures for those in need of protection, and offer legal alternatives to dangerous sea crossings.
